Funds will be used to grow the team, explore new business verticals and build more healthcare solutions from this year onwards

Singapore – Doctor Anywhere, a Singapore-based telehealth start up, has successfully raised S$5.6 million in a series A financing round anchored by Kamet Capital Partners, alongside other investors.

The funding round gives Doctor Anywhere a solid financial edge to continue developing its products and services that will boost healthcare accessibility in Singapore. Funds will be channelled towards growing the team base, exploring new business verticals and developing more healthcare solutions from this year onwards.

“We are grateful for the support from our diversified strategic investors base which will no doubt broaden our network and development opportunities,” said Mr. Lim Wai Mun, Founder of Doctor Anywhere. “Together with a strong team and sensible go-to market strategy, we believe Doctor Anywhere is well-placed to take the reins in this relatively new but burgeoning industry.”

Founded in 2015, Doctor Anywhere was established to provide healthcare providers with more options for care delivery, improving their access and reach to patients. The company’s current products offer care-seekers quick and easy access to healthcare providers through video consultations on the mobile phone. These services are currently available for the public’s use through the Doctor Anywhere app.

Spearheaded by a team from diverse backgrounds, Doctor Anywhere has launched three business verticals to-date - General Practitioner, Lactation and Medical Aesthetics consultations. Since the launch of Doctor Anywhere’s first service in October 2017, the team has more than doubled its size to support growing business operations.
