South East Asia benefits from soaring gloves business

August 19, 2020 | News

ASEAN countries have become the largest suppliers of gloves in the world

With the Chinese products not being utilized by some of the countries, the focus has now been shifted to the other South East Asian Nations in the ASEAN belt who are currently producing almost 85% of the world's gloves needs.

Be it Hartalega Sdn Bhd and Top Gloves in Malaysia, Nam Viet in Vietnam, every manufacturer is growing leaps and bounds. ASEAN countries have become the largest suppliers of gloves in the world.

One such company which is geared up to face the rough weather is SRAM & MRAM GDIH First Response Solutions Limited, part of SRAM & MRAM Group, a global conglomerate headquartered at UK, has been at the forefront of providing solutions to pandemics such as COVID-19.

The company has been engaged in proving PPE Kits, Rapid Testing Kits both Antibody and Antigen along with RT-PCR and its own immune boosters under the brand name of "MRUTANJAY" and is currently focusing their operations on the Asian and South America markets with the help of the Red Cross and the Knights of Malta and in the process help the countries tide over the pandemic crisis.

SRAM & MRAM Group has currently more than 500 employees directly or indirectly working round the clock to ensure that the lockdown does not affect its business operations and its CSR initiatives and has been able to speed up its business and social targets and in the process help the humanity as a whole to come out successfully fighting the pandemic. The focus is now shifting towards putting up a factory in the Johor Region of Malaysia and also in Vietnam in association with other leading players in the Industry.
