

China's integrated online healthcare platform Dingdang Health raises US$220 M

08 June 2021 | News

Aims to provide online-to-offline strategy to cover services including medical care, medicine delivery and medical insurance

China's leading integrated online healthcare platform Dingdang Health announced that it has raised US$220 million in its latest financing round. This round was led by TPG Capital Asia and co-led by OrbiMed and Redview Capital. Other investors included, Valliance, Travis Global Limited (which is an affiliate of Orchid Asia), Summer Capital, and Yingke PE.

Mr. Yang Wenlong, founder and chairman of Dingdang Health, said: "With this round of financing, Dingdang Health will press ahead with its online-to-offline strategy to cover services including medical care, medicine delivery and medical insurance. Riding on the new trend of online medical care and medication services amid Covid-19, we aim at providing all-encompassing online services catering to various needs including consultation, drug purchase, chronic disease management and psychological consultation through product upgrades and technological innovation."

As a pioneer of online healthcare products and service provider, Dingdang Health's online-to-offline model enables it to supply drugs from the pharma manufacturers and offline pharmacies to meet users' urgent medical needs. The company has also expanded its business to more areas such as medical care, medicine delivery and medical insurance. The strategy has helped the platform remain competitive in China's digital health and wellness market.

Dingdang Health's business model perfectly combines both digitalization and healthcare. Leveraging big data and internet technologies, the company has created a pioneering self-operating model that provides online medical care and medicine delivery services. It links pharmaceutical companies, pharmacies and users in an all-encompassing ecosystem with timely and caring services.