UK signs MoU with Taiwan for health cooperation

July 11, 2023 | News

Focusing on pandemic preparedness, digital health, mental health, and healthy ageing

To further strengthen health cooperation between the United Kingdom (UK) and Taiwan, a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on health cooperation was signed by Representative John Dennis at the British Office Taipei and Representative Kelly Wu-Chiao Hsieh at the Taipei Representative Office in the UK recently.

John Dennis, Representative at the British Office Taipei said, "This new MoU on health cooperation marks a new level of ambition to deepen our existing collaboration on health. It will provide us with the platform and mechanism to look further ahead on how we can work together on a range of important issues for the sake of the health and welfare of our people."

Areas of cooperation include pandemic preparedness, digital health, health insurance, mental health, and healthy ageing. This MoU will provide the framework for further cooperation on activities such as information sharing and exchange, visits, joint workshops and meetings.
