To provide comprehensive knowledge of the APAC region including customs regulations and the local transport network

Biocair, an established global leader in life science logistics, has announced further expansion of its operations in the Asia Pacific (APAC) region with the opening of a new office in Shanghai, China.

The office is collocated with its warehouse to facilitate operations and enable enhanced collaboration between operations, sales, warehouse and transportation teams. Biocair has achieved 25% business growth in APAC in the first half of 2025 and, with double the footprint of Biocair's previous Shanghai office, the new site will support the company's ongoing growth.

Biocair first opened a Shanghai office in 2009 as its primary APAC location and has since opened a further seven offices in the region. This new office is strategically located near Pudong International Airport as well as Pharma Valley in the Zhangjiang High Tech Zone. Following the recent opening of Biocair's Chengdu office, this expansion further strengthens Biocair's presence in the region and its position as a leading global logistics provider.

Biocair's dedicated Shanghai team of logistics experts provide comprehensive knowledge of the APAC region including customs regulations and the local transport network. The company offers a full range of temperature controlled logistics services, including controlled ambient (15-25°C), refrigerated (2-8°C), frozen (-20°C), dry ice (-78°C) and Liquid Nitrogen dry shipper (-196°C). The team will also continue to build on Biocair's presence in the region, strengthening business development activities.
