

International Lenders Commend Summit Group for Sustained Cooperation Under Aziz Khan's Leadership

20 January 2026 | News

When DEG, Germany's development finance institution, confirmed October 30 that Summit Meghnaghat Power Company "complied with its obligations to the satisfaction of the DFI Facility Lenders," the statement carried weight

The confirmation closed a $190 million financing cycle that Summit Meghnaghat Power Company completed precisely on schedule after ten years of operations. DEG coordinated the six-institution lending consortium that included Standard Chartered Bank, FMO Netherlands, OPEC Fund for International Development, British International Investment, and Bangladesh's Infrastructure Development Company Limited.

This is the latest development in Summit Group's track record with development finance institutions. The International Finance Corporation financed Summit's first independent power plant in Khulna in 1998, establishing a relationship now spanning more than 25 years. That initial partnership marked private sector entry into Bangladesh's electricity generation, setting patterns that would shape Summit Group's development for decades.

What DFI Compliance Actually Requires

"Compliance with obligations to the satisfaction of DFI Facility Lenders" encompasses far more than timely debt service payments. Development finance institutions impose comprehensive oversight frameworks across financial, environmental, social, and governance dimensions throughout project lifecycles.

Wu Yan Bin, chief financial officer at Summit Power International, explained one accountability mechanism: "To pay an invoice to a contractor, this has to be certified by the lender's technical advisor that indeed those milestones have been met before lenders are willing to disburse funds."

Technical advisors employed by lenders verify that contractors complete specified project milestones before any construction payments occur. Environmental monitoring obligations continue throughout operational periods, often spanning decades beyond initial commissioning dates.

Dividend distributions to shareholders require audited financial statements demonstrating compliance with all debt covenants. Projects must meet stringent debt service coverage ratios before any returns flow to equity holders. Every dividend remittance from Bangladesh to Singapore required Bangladesh Bank approval with comprehensive documentation.

These requirements create checkpoints: multiple verification stages that prevent problems before they affect project performance or lender interests.

IFC Relationship Since 1998

Summit Group's relationship with the International Finance Corporation predates Bangladesh's transformation into a country with near-universal electricity access. When IFC financed the Khulna power plant in 1998, approximately 20% of Bangladesh's population had grid-connected electricity.

The IFC partnership has evolved over subsequent decades. The institution's 2016 investment of $175.5 million in Summit Power International, alongside IFC Asset Management Company and EMA Power, enabled Summit Group's Singapore incorporation. This restructured relationship moved beyond project-level financing to equity participation in Summit Power International itself.

"IFC facilitated the incorporation of a Singapore entity and invested in the structure, which enabled the Singapore entity to invest back into Bangladesh," said Ayesha Khan, managing director and CEO of Summit Power International. "So that was a very important transition period for us and a very important transformation for us. It did change the way we started doing business."

IFC's continued involvement as both equity holder and lender to Summit projects demonstrates sustained institutional confidence across multiple investment cycles. The relationship weathered Bangladesh's power sector challenges from 2022-2024, when government payment delays to independent power producers exceeded nine months at times and accumulated arrears reached BDT 23,283 crore by January 2025.

Summit Group maintained operations throughout this period while meeting obligations to international lenders. The company continued generating electricity without interruption.

Multiple DFI Relationships Create Compounding Credibility

Summit Group's development finance institution partnerships extend across multiple organizations: International Finance Corporation, Asian Development Bank, Islamic Development Bank, DEG Germany, FMO Netherlands, OPEC Fund for International Development, British International Investment, and Swiss export credit agency SERV.

Each institution brings distinct expertise and requirements. IFC Performance Standards, adopted by more than 100 financial institutions globally through the Equator Principles, establish environmental and social frameworks that many development finance institutions reference. Projects meeting these standards undergo comprehensive due diligence covering community impacts, labor conditions, biodiversity protection, and indigenous peoples' rights.

Wu Yan Bin explained how development finance institution involvement affects broader financing access. "IFC played a pivotal role in establishing Summit Power International in Singapore," he said.

Development finance institutions protect their reputations through rigorous initial assessments and ongoing monitoring. Their continued participation in Summit projects provides independent validation of the company's governance and operational standards.

Building Infrastructure That Lasts

Summit Group manages electricity generation facilities totaling over 2,000 MW capacity distributed across 11 plants in Bangladesh. The company is Bangladesh's largest independent power producer.

Summit Power Limited, the publicly listed Bangladesh subsidiary, has maintained continued AAA credit ratings from Credit Rating Information and Services Limited.

The October 2025 Meghnaghat loan repayment provides recent validation of Summit Group's approach to development finance institution relationships. Meeting every scheduled debt service obligation across a decade while satisfying comprehensive environmental, social, and governance requirements demonstrates sustained institutional discipline.

Summit Group's experience with development finance institutions, spanning more than 25 years, illustrates how sustained cooperation builds institutional trust that extends beyond individual projects or companies to affect entire countries' access to infrastructure development and international capital.
