

Australia gears up for its annual biotech extravaganza

14 September 2012 | News | By BioSpectrum Bureau

Australia gears up for its annual biotech extravaganza

Singapore: This year's AusBiotech Conference, which is scheduled to be held from October 30 to November 02, 2012 in Melbourne, will attract over 1,500 delegates.

The annual conference is the region's largest gathering of biotech companies, investors and individuals and provides excellent opportunity to showcase one's product or connect with others in the industry.

This year's conference will also feature several important satellite events, including the Australasian Life Science Investment Summit (ALSIS). The summit will showcase the latest opportunities in Australian biotechnology and life science investment.

Furthermore, the AusFoodtech Symposium will explore opportunities in functional foods and nutraceuticals. The conference is an excellent opportunity to discover how the vibrant biotech and lifescience industry is helping Australia to fuel its growth through global economic challenges. In order to register or get additional information about the event, please visit www.ausbiotechnc.org.