

GAMA Healthcare acquires Australian distributor AMCLA

23 May 2017 | News

The company plans to use the investment to emulate its success in the UK, where it provides bespoke, local training through group sessions, ward-based training and practitioner meetings, delivered by a team of infection control specialists.

GAMA Healthcare, a UK manufacturer of infection prevention products, has acquired the Clinell division of its Australian distributor, AMCLA. GAMA will take over AMCLA's current office in Mornington, Victoria, where it plans to retain all AMCLA personnel and aims to double the current workforce over the next 12 months.

GAMA Healthcare products are marketed under the brands Clinell, Carell and Cleanall, and are used in many hospitals in around the world. The company plans to use the investment to emulate its success in the UK, where it provides bespoke, local training through group sessions, ward-based training and practitioner meetings, delivered by a team of infection control specialists.

GAMA has developed the most advanced and fully customisable tablet-based training suite that is free to all customers. In the last six months of 2016, GAMA hosted over 250 training days. This support has been critical in developing new business opportunities and retaining key contracts.